ALMOST ANIMATED WITH JASON

VOL 107

SEEKING ANSWERS · A LOVE BULB STORY

Where should we go when we are seeking answers? Love Bulb takes Jason through six small changes, with lightbulbs SAGE and SPARK asking WHAT IS GOOD FOR THE WORLD & WHAT IS GOOD FOR THE WALLET!

YOUTUBE @SUCCESSSITCOMS

JASONPLOUFF.COM/ALMOSTANIMATED

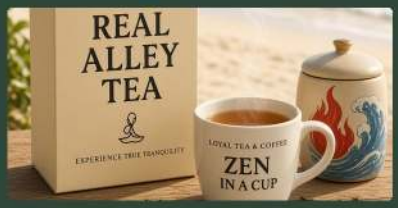

PUBLISHED BY BITS OF BRILLIANCE PUBLISHING

FROM THE BITCOIN BULB BREW CAFE

REAL ALLEY TEA

Find Zen in every cup.

Brew a cup, let it steep, and take a moment before the day takes off. Ask about the two-for-one offer.

POTENTIAL COLOGNE

Find your endless potential.

For the big pitch, the first date, or the fresh start. $39.99. Bitcoin accepted.

THE LIGHTBULB GRATITUDE RUG

You don't need it!

Set it beside your bed. When your feet hit the floor, name three things you are grateful for.

Copyright © 2026 Jason Allen Plouff. All rights reserved.

No part of this book may be reproduced, stored or transmitted in any form or by any means without written permission from the copyright holder, except for brief quotations in reviews.

This is a work of fiction and parody. Names, characters, products (including the Gratitude Rug, the Echo Mirror, Failure Insurance and Potential Cologne), businesses and incidents are the products of the author's imagination or are used fictitiously. Real places, such as San Blas Beach, El Salvador, are used fictitiously. Any resemblance to actual persons, living or dead, or to actual businesses or events is coincidental.

Illustrations were created with the help of AI image-generation tools, then selected, edited, composed and lettered for this book. Story by Jason Allen Plouff, adapted for this volume.

First edition, 2026. Independently published.

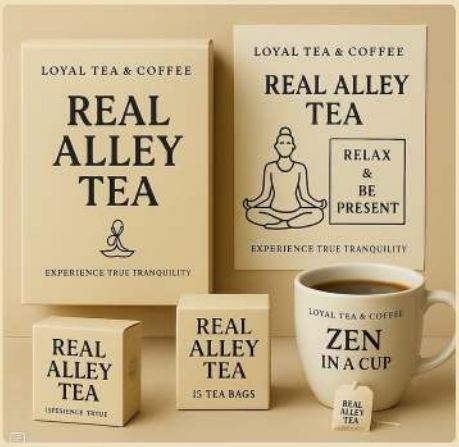

REAL ALLEY TEA

ZEN IN A CUP

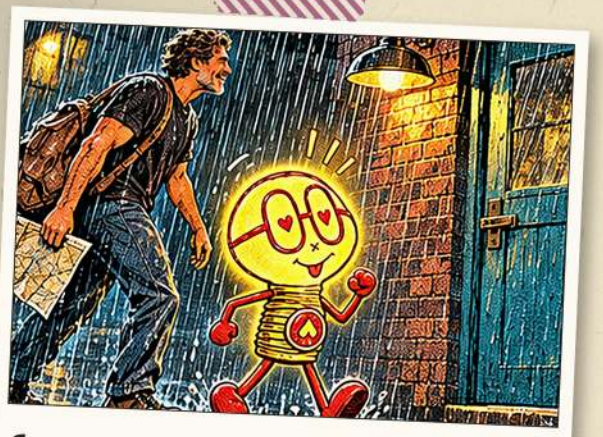

Is your filament flickering? Put the kettle on. Real Alley Tea from Loyal Tea & Coffee gives you a reason to slow down, warm your hands, and enjoy the first sip.

Fifteen tea bags, fifteen chances to be present. Brew a cup before the day gets loud, or share one with someone who could use a quiet minute.

RELAX & BE PRESENT

SEEKING ANSWERS

Jason and Love Bulb, out in the rain.

THE RUNDOWN

1. Ch 1: The Door in the Rain — P4
2. Ch 2: The Reel That Wouldn't Turn — P9
3. Ch 3: The Paper Boat — P14
4. Ch 4: The Fork in the Path — P19
5. Ch 5: The Window Opens — P24
6. Ch 6: Room for a New Root — P29
7. The original spoken piece — P34
8. 11 lessons to take with you — P35

Tonight Jason hands the mic to Love Bulb, the glowing narrator of his spoken piece "Where Should We Go When We Are Seeking Answers?" Six chapters, each with a cold open from the screenplay, the color comics, and one lesson to try. Sage and Spark keep the commentary coming.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Tonight's question: where should we go when we are seeking answers?

SPARK

Love Bulb is narrating. I'm not jealous. I'm SLIGHTLY jealous.

THE DOOR IN THE RAIN

JASON, YOUR HOST

Tonight I hand the mic to Love Bulb. It starts the way most of my searches start: with a plan and a lot of rain.

Storyboard sketch

CHAPTER 01 OF 06

SCREENPLAY

EXT. OLD CINEMA – EVENING

Rain rolls off the marquee. Jason arrives with a paper route folded inside a folder. The ticket window is closed. He tries it anyway.

INT. CINEMA LOBBY – CONTINUOUS

Love Bulb lights up at the end of the counter. Jason flattens his map with both hands. The ink swims there in the water.

LOVE BULB (V.O.)

I'd watched him look at the same door three times. Then I saw another one in a puddle.

Jason follows the reflection to the blue door. It gives under his palm. Inside, an old projector waits.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Every search starts somewhere. His started wet.

SPARK

I would have brought an umbrella. And a backup umbrella.

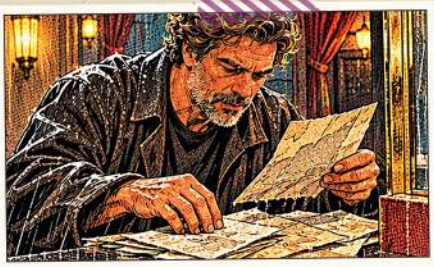

THE DOOR IN THE RAIN

I've seen Jason come prepared. That evening, the rain came prepared too.

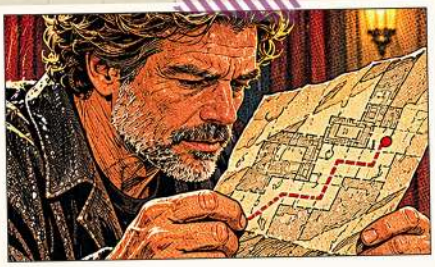

He'd brought the answer in an envelope. The ticket booth sent it back.

Inside, he arranged his evidence in the usual order.

That little glow at the window? That's me. I was having a much better time with the weather.

His map put the door exactly where he'd expected it.

I tried pointing lower. People don't trust puddles nearly enough.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Sometimes the answer shows up upside down.

SPARK

Puddles: nature's plot twist!

THE DOOR IN THE RAIN (2/3)

There it was, upside down and perfectly plain.

We took the side passage. His map could come along if it liked.

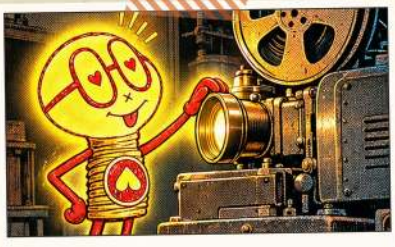

At a blue door, the rain got quieter.

Jason put his hand on the latch and gave it a little room to move.

The door opened into a room he'd never thought to look for.

I volunteered to be the lighting department.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

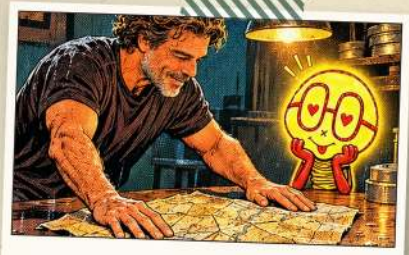

A quiet room can be the answer before the answer.

SPARK

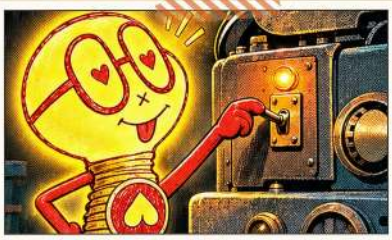

I am the lighting department. Please hold your applause.

THE DOOR IN THE RAIN (3/3)

His map dried on the table while we looked around.

One little switch was all it took to get the projector humming.

First there was a beam. Then we could see the room it was falling through.

Jason sat down. For a while the only thing either of us needed to do was listen.

By the time the map dried, the rain had drawn a few routes of its own.

I watched the clouds lift. We'd found somewhere to begin.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Stay with the new detail before you decide.

SPARK

The new detail tonight: me. Glowing. In the rain.

WHERE DO YOU LOOK WHEN THE PLAN STOPS WORKING?

A soaked map is still a map. The trouble starts when I ask it to tell me everything. Planning helps me see a route, and sometimes that route carries me far. But an unexpected situation gives me information I didn't have when I did the planning. If I keep consulting the old picture, I may miss the one forming right in front of me.

There is a moment between realizing a plan failed and deciding what it means. I can fill that moment by trying the same door with more force. I can also look around long enough to notice what the rain has brought into view. A different state of mind can make familiar ground feel like a place I'm seeing for the first time.

TRY IT

Think of a situation you've tried to solve the same way twice. What new detail has appeared since the first attempt? Stay with that detail for a minute before you decide what to do.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Stay with the new detail before you decide.

SPARK

The new detail tonight: me. Glowing. In the rain.

THE REEL THAT WOULDN'T TURN

JASON, YOUR HOST

I know this one well. When something sticks, my first move is to push harder. Watch what that costs.

Storyboard sketch

CHAPTER

02 OF 06

SCREENPLAY

INT. PROJECTION BOOTH – NIGHT

A reel sticks. Jason turns the crank harder. The film tears at the gate and slips to the floor.

LOVE BULB (V.O.)

He got exactly the movement he'd asked for. The picture came apart.

Love Bulb shines into the guide. One edge of the film is caught outside its track. Jason lifts the reel just enough to free the strip. He threads it again slowly.

ON THE SCREEN

A seedling lifts its head. The reel keeps turning after Jason lets go.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

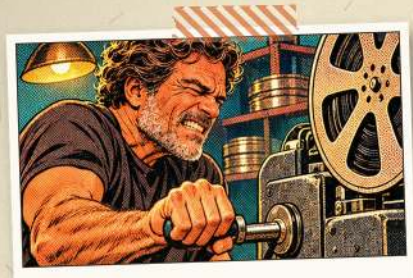

Movement is not always progress.

SPARK

Unless you're dancing. Then it's ALWAYS progress.

THE REEL THAT WOULDN'T TURN

Jason gave the crank a turn. Something inside held tight.

The strip was already telling us where it hurt.

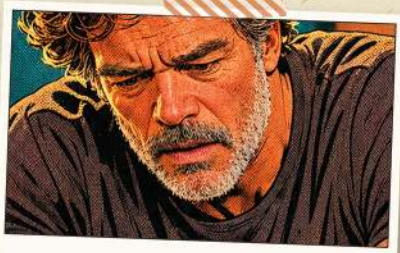

I reached for his wrist. My arm, as you can see, has certain limitations.

He leaned in. The crank finally moved.

So did all the film that had been keeping the picture together.

Jason could see the tear from where he stood.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Look for the edge that slipped out of its track.

SPARK

Change the angle, not the pressure. Writing that on my filament.

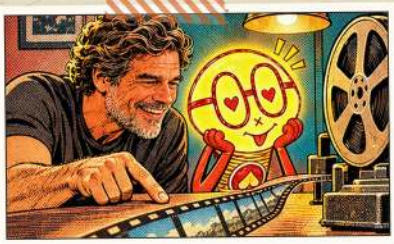

THE REEL THAT WOULDN'T TURN (2/3)

I watched the loose film curl. It looked relieved.

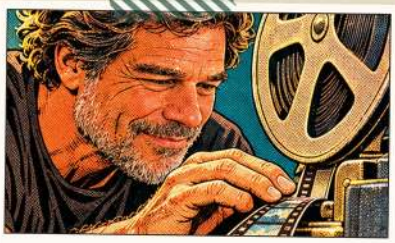

He opened his hands. We had a little time to see what had happened.

We followed the strip back through the projector.

One edge had slipped right out of its track.

This time he held the reel just steady enough for me to see it.

I lit the guide. It was a small job, but I could reach it.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

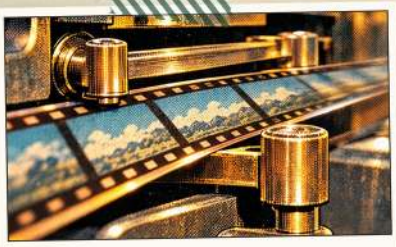

A seam in the film is still a working picture.

SPARK

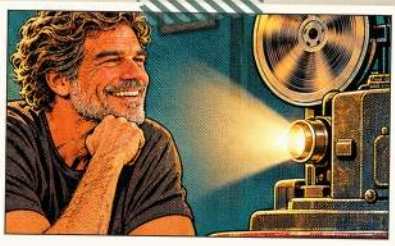

Good for the world: patience. Good for the wallet: fewer torn reels!

THE REEL THAT WOULDN'T TURN (3/3)

The strip went through with barely a sound.

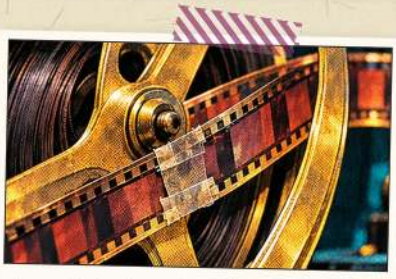

Jason let the projector try again.

A seedling on the screen lifted its head.

The reel kept turning after he took away his hands.

A patch in the film left a seam I could see on every turn.

We let it run through. The picture could carry a seam.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Judge the harvest, not just the result.

SPARK

Did anybody else hear the reel sigh with relief?

WHAT DOES A RESULT COST WHEN YOU HAVE TO MUSCLE IT INTO PLACE?

Getting movement can feel like getting an answer. It satisfies the part of me that wants proof I can do something. The harder question comes afterward. Did the way I got that result leave the situation healthier? If another person was involved, did I notice what the effort was doing to them?

A stuck reel deserves a close look. There may be a small place where a change in angle matters more than a change in pressure. The extra time it takes to see that place can feel like a luxury, especially when I want relief. It can also spare me the hours I'd spend repairing what I tore while trying to hurry.

TRY IT

Recall a recent moment when you got your way. What did the result leave behind? Name one thing you could have noticed sooner about the situation or the people in it.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Judge the harvest, not just the result.

SPARK

Did anybody else hear the reel sigh with relief?

THE PAPER BOAT

JASON, YOUR HOST

I had a whole speech ready. The wastebasket had other plans, and honestly, the wastebasket was right.

Storyboard sketch

CHAPTER 03 OF 06

SCREENPLAY

INT. CINEMA LOBBY – DAY

Jason rehearses an explanation in front of a mirror. A page slips and falls into a wastebasket.

Love Bulb fishes it out. He studies the clean reverse, then folds the paper into a boat. In the puddle by the door, it leans hard to one side.

LOVE BULB (V.O.)

The speech hadn't made him laugh once. Twelve seconds with a boat and he was on his knees laughing.

He adjusts a fold. Love Bulb helps him launch it again.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

The back of a page is a fresh start.

SPARK

Page two of the speech: now a vessel. Promoted!

THE PAPER BOAT

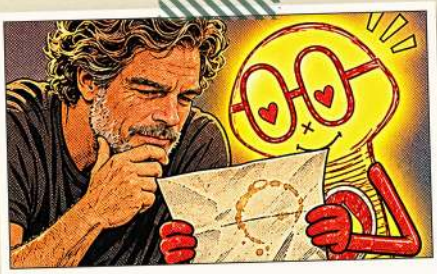

Jason was practicing an explanation that was supposed to fix everything.

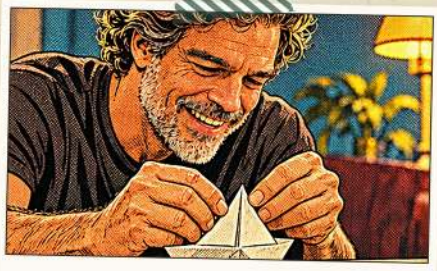

The wastebasket caught page two before he'd finished page one.

I rescued it. Mostly because I was curious.

The back of the page was clear. That got his attention.

He folded the paper where his argument had been.

Our first launch had a pronounced lean.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Laughing first makes the next try easier.

SPARK

A boat with a lean is still a boat. I lean too. It's my style.

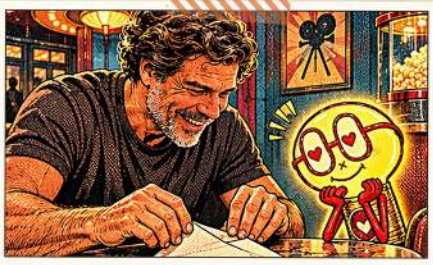

THE PAPER BOAT (2/3)

I laughed before I could think of anything encouraging to say.

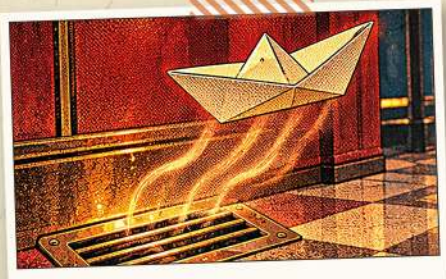

Then Jason laughed, and went looking for the fold that had let in water.

We came back to the table for another try.

I offered one foot. That's my preferred unit of assistance.

A little warm air got under the fold.

Outside, the gutter had just enough water to carry it.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Small experiments, small shipwrecks, big lessons.

SPARK

Rest in peace, boat number one. Defeated by a leaf.

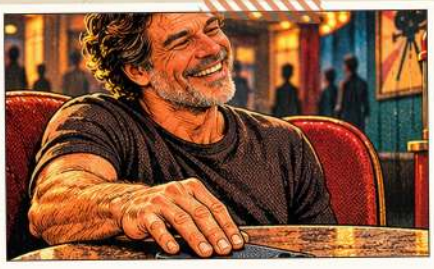

THE PAPER BOAT (3/3)

For half a minute I had a boat of my own.

Then a leaf became a very small shipwreck.

Jason left the phone on the table and watched it happen.

By then we were watching to see what the boat would do.

The boat came back to shore a little soft around the edges.

Jason carried it inside. He wanted to keep the thing that had made him laugh.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Make it an experiment, not a verdict.

SPARK

Fold, float, laugh, refold. That's my whole business plan.

WHAT WOULD A MORE PLAYFUL WAY OF CHANGING FEEL LIKE?

I can talk myself through a habit until I know all the reasons it ought to change. Then the familiar moment arrives and my hands do exactly what they did yesterday. Perhaps the first change is what I see when I look at the moment. If it looks like a test of my worth, there's very little room to play. If it looks like a small experiment, I can afford to learn something from it.

A playful response can still be deliberate. It asks a smaller question and lets the result answer. The boat tipping over doesn't require a verdict on the person who folded it. It tells us where the paper took on water. Forgiveness leaves enough of my attention free to see the next fold.

TRY IT

Choose one habitual reaction you'd like to loosen. What would the smallest experiment be? Pick something you can try once today and look at what actually happens.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Make it an experiment, not a verdict.

SPARK

Fold, float, laugh, refold. That's my whole business plan.

THE FORK IN THE PATH

JASON, YOUR HOST

A crossroads used to mean I had to see the whole route first. This chapter is about seeing one step.

Storyboard sketch

CHAPTER

04 OF 06

SCREENPLAY

EXT. PARK CROSSROADS – DUSK

A branch blocks the route Jason has marked. Water runs across the path and away through the trees. There are fresh footprints beside it.

Jason puts the map into his pocket. Love Bulb follows the footprints with him to a greenhouse.

LOVE BULB (V.O.)

Through the wet glass he could make out both the plants and his own reflection.

INT. GREENHOUSE – CONTINUOUS

A terracotta pot sits empty on a bench. Jason takes it home.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

When the branch decides, follow the footprints.

SPARK

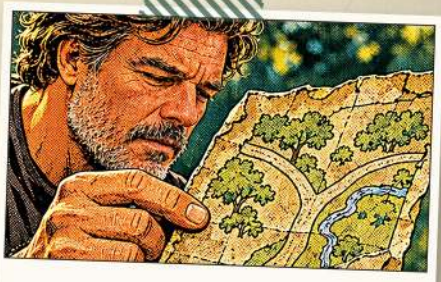

The water found a way around. Water is very smart.

THE FORK IN THE PATH

You can see a fork in a path long before you're ready to call it a choice.

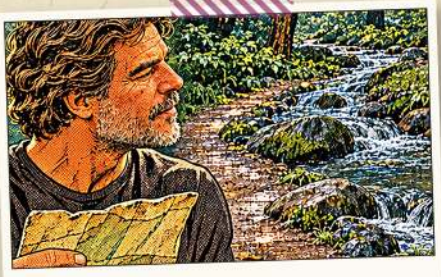

Jason had marked his route carefully.

The branch had made a decision of its own.

Footprints pointed toward a quieter stretch of gravel.

Even the water had found a way around.

Jason folded up his map. He could still use it when it helped.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

One step is enough information for now.

SPARK

I stood on a rock for the view. Tall bulbs only.

THE FORK IN THE PATH (2/3)

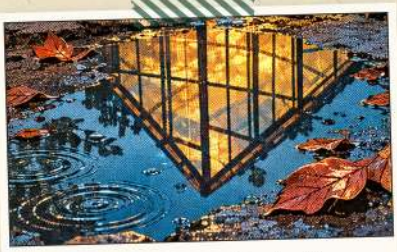

I climbed onto a stone so he could see how far we'd come.

He took a step. That was as much as either of us could see.

A glass roof came into view among the trees.

In the puddle it looked almost close enough to touch.

He wiped a patch of glass clear before reaching for the handle.

I had to stand on tiptoe to get the same view.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Sometimes you meet yourself in the glass.

SPARK

Hello, handsome. Oh wait, that's my reflection.

THE FORK IN THE PATH (3/3)

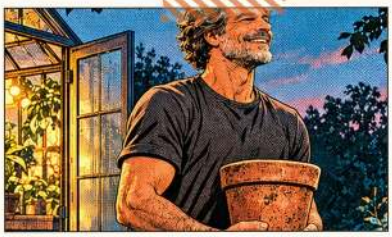

Inside, the air felt like a different season.

Jason caught sight of himself among the leaves.

One pot on the bench had room for something to grow.

He carried it home with both hands.

On our way home the empty pot seemed to get heavier.

I liked our shadows on the wall. The two of us could fit in the space it took to carry one new thing.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Leave the outcome open for a few steps.

SPARK

An empty pot: the start of something good for the world AND the wallet.

WHAT CHANGES WHEN THE PERSON SEEKING THE ANSWER CHANGES TOO?

A crossroads offers two kinds of uncertainty. I may be unsure which way to go, and I may be unsure who I will be if I take the way I hadn't planned. I can draw a new route and still carry the old demand that life turn out exactly as I pictured. It takes practice to walk a few steps while leaving the outcome open.

Sometimes what changes first is the size of the question. Jason wanted to see the whole path. The footprints only told him where to place his next step. By following that much information, he reached a place he could never have chosen from the map alone. The empty pot was something he could carry home and make part of his life.

TRY IT

Where are you waiting for the whole route to become clear? Write down one step you could take that would tell you something you don't already know.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Leave the outcome open for a few steps.

SPARK

An empty pot: the start of something good for the world AND the wallet.

THE WINDOW OPENS

JASON, YOUR HOST

Here's the hardest one for me. I always have the next reply ready. Love Bulb catches me with my thumb in the air.

Storyboard sketch

CHAPTER

05 OF 06

SCREENPLAY

INT. JASON'S KITCHEN – LATE AFTERNOON

Jason holds his thumb over his phone. Love Bulb stands beside the empty pot. He sets the phone down and opens the window a crack.

INT. JASON'S KITCHEN – MORNING

Jason takes a call. He leans forward, about to answer, then lets the silence hold. His shoulders lower.

LOVE BULB (V.O.)

I could only hear his side. That morning, his side had a lot more room in it.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

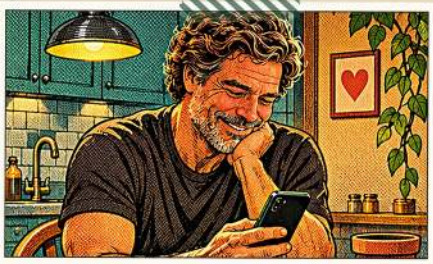

Put the phone down where your face can be seen.

SPARK

A pot is excellent company. Never interrupts.

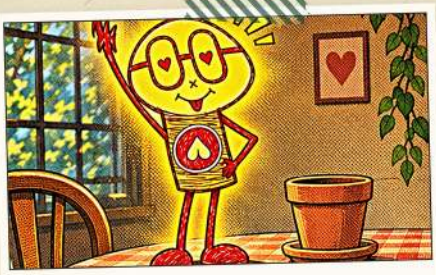

THE WINDOW OPENS

That afternoon Jason did most of his talking with his thumb.

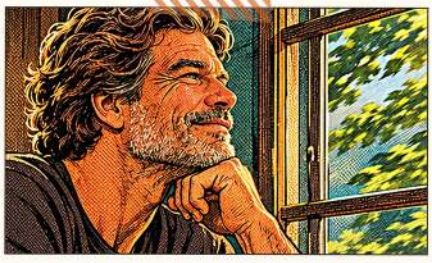

He had the next reply ready to go.

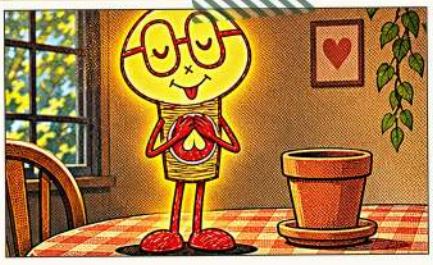

I sat down by the pot. It was good company.

After a while he put the phone down where I could see his face.

Through the glass, he watched the trees blowing.

I brought my glow down low. I'd been lighting the whole kitchen by accident.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

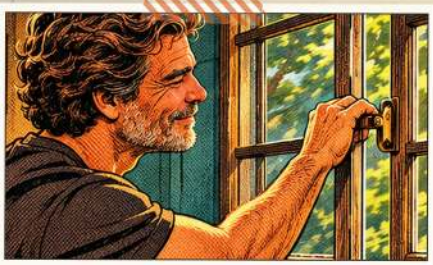

A crack in the window is enough for the breeze.

SPARK

I dimmed my glow. Very mature of me.

THE WINDOW OPENS (2/3)

He opened the window a crack.

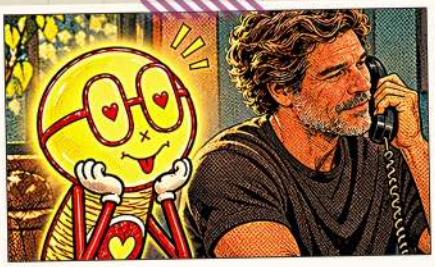

That made enough space for the breeze to get in.

By morning a pale stripe of sun reached the counter.

The phone was still there. So was the choice he'd made the day before.

When it rang, Jason let the other person finish.

I saw his shoulders drop before I heard him speak.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Let the other person finish.

SPARK

Even I can let a pause breathe. ...See? Breathing.

THE WINDOW OPENS (3/3)

He took a sip, listened, and asked one more question.

I stayed where I was. Even I can let a pause breathe.

Later he put a second cup on the table.

I liked looking at the empty chair. It meant somebody could sit there.

A cup on either side of a table leaves room for two versions of the morning.

I stayed by the window and watched the branch move in the breeze.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

One breath before you answer.

SPARK

A second cup means a second story. Good for the world!

HOW MUCH CAN YOU HEAR WHEN YOU LEAVE A PAUSE?

Expecting the unexpected sounds tense if I picture myself braced for every turn. There is another way to wait. I can stay interested in what might happen without having to know it in advance. The posture feels different in my body. My shoulders come down. It gets easier to hear the end of a sentence.

Receptivity matters most when there is something I want. I have a strong picture of how a conversation should go when I've rehearsed it all night. But another person is bringing a whole day of their own. Listening gives me a chance to meet what they are bringing and lets them experience something different from me.

TRY IT

Try taking one complete breath before you answer a question you think you already understand. What did the other person do with the pause? What did you notice in yourself?

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

One breath before you answer.

SPARK

A second cup means a second story. Good for the world!

ROOM FOR A NEW ROOT

JASON, YOUR HOST

The last chapter is about letting go. Keep the one frame that matters, and make room for something new to grow.

Storyboard sketch

CHAPTER

06 OF 06

SCREENPLAY

INT. JASON'S HALL CLOSET – DAY

Jason lifts a dented film tin down from a crowded shelf. Inside is a single frame he wants to keep. He sets the frame on the shelf and carries the empty tins away.

INT. JASON'S KITCHEN – LATER

He fills the terracotta pot and opens his palm to show Love Bulb a seed. Love Bulb shines into the soil as he plants it.

LOVE BULB (V.O.)

For a while, what we'd made room for was impossible to see.

DISSOLVE TO a thin green shoot catching the morning light.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Keep the frame that matters. Let the tins go.

SPARK

The dust had a quiet year. Then we showed up.

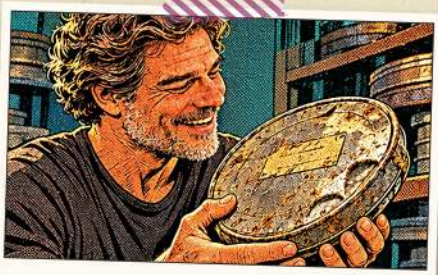

ROOM FOR A NEW ROOT

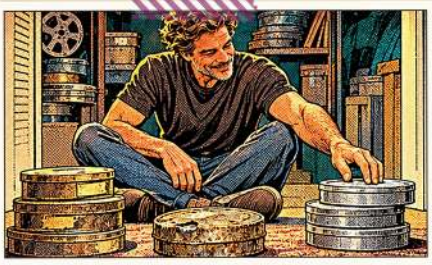

We opened the closet and discovered a small mountain of reasons to close it again.

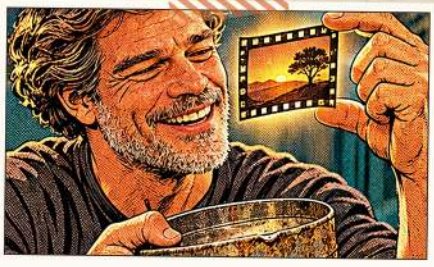

I climbed to the top. The dust had been having a very quiet year.

Jason found the old tin he'd been saving.

He sorted for a while. The floor gave him room to make up his mind.

There was a single frame inside the tin that he wanted to keep.

I held the lid while he looked at the frame one more time.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Put it where you'll actually see it.

SPARK

Shelf placement: a very underrated life skill.

ROOM FOR A NEW ROOT (2/3)

He set it on the shelf where he'd actually see it.

The sun reached the shelf that afternoon.

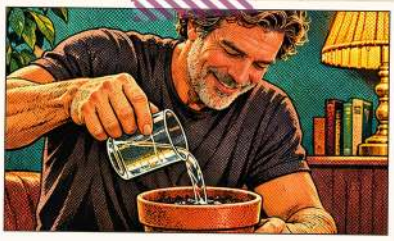

The empty pot took more soil than we'd guessed.

The seed was so small I could light the whole thing at once.

Jason tucked it in where neither of us could check on it.

Then he watered it and got on with the day.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Small seeds grow on their own schedule.

SPARK

One morning it just DID. I cheered. Loudly.

ROOM FOR A NEW ROOT (3/3)

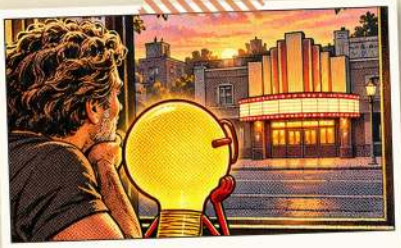

It didn't come up the next morning. One morning it did.

We moved it into the light beside our lopsided boat.

By then I had to peer through leaves to see the kitchen.

If you're wondering where the answer was, I remember the day we started making room for it.

The boat and the shoot shared a sill. One had taught us to try. One needed us to keep trying.

When the sun came up, Jason stayed to watch. So did I.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Water it, then get on with the day.

SPARK

Good for the world, good for the wallet, good for the plant!

WHAT ARE YOU READY TO PUT DOWN SO SOMETHING ELSE CAN GROW?

Some of the things I hold on to once helped me. A rehearsed answer may have helped me feel safe. A habit of taking charge may have got me through a difficult hour. I can be grateful for what those responses did and still notice how much room they take up today. Letting go often starts with a very ordinary decision about what I want to keep close at hand.

Planting the seed gives that decision a daily shape. Jason has to remember the water, notice the light and make time to check the soil. I can try a similar kind of care with the ways I want to change around friends, family, coworkers and myself. A quieter reply is one watering. Coming back to listen tomorrow is another.

TRY IT

Name one old response you are ready to set down. Name one action you'll repeat in its place this week. Put a reminder where you'll see it at the moment you're most likely to need it.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Water it, then get on with the day.

SPARK

Good for the world, good for the wallet, good for the plant!

IN JASON'S WORDS

00:01
Where should we go when we are seeking answers? When life gives us unexpected life situations, which is really all of the time if we are involved with life just a little. How do we know which direction to seek answers from? Should we approach our seeking, or the solutions within the seeking, in a logical, methodical process, or through a flexible, deliberate intention that puts us in the time and space that has disconnected us from where we were, and the solutions that already exist for us on another plane of thought, in another state of mind?

00:46
Is the path of seeking where we muscle through problems, doing our best to control them over and over? Is that really something that produces a good, peaceful harvest? Are we wanting results, or are we taking all things and people, experiences in stride, each opportunity giving us an opportunity to craft the character and human being that we are becoming, and that those around us are becoming at the same time?

01:22
We can get results. We can take charge over and over again to mold or shift life into the ways we think or want it to be. But is that the process we want in our journey of life experiences? Or do we seek a more loving and forgiving, playful life experience? If we are wanting to break habitual habits and actions, then shouldn't we see things first differently before we expect our life to be different? How are important things in our life going to look and be different if we're not first open to all the possibilities that exist that we are wanting, just being open to them?

02:07
If we're going to first open ourselves to realities we are not yet fully experiencing in life, then expecting the unexpected is a good crossroads to start at, at the crossroads of opening ourselves. We can seek change, or we can change while seeking a life-altering transformation where no thing of the old self remains, a completely renewed mind. And that makes all of the difference.

02:41
When we start to open ourselves at the crossroads of the realities of life, we find that expecting life to be different actually softens us or makes us more open and receptive to the change that is inevitably happening in our lives, especially as we seek more and more things that we desire.

03:03
If we are first opening ourselves to the possibilities of life being different, then aren't we really letting go of some parts of ourselves as we are making room for something else to take its place? If we want ourselves to be experiencing life differently with our friends, family, coworkers and self, then opening up to change is actually letting go to make room for a new you to take root and grow. Without doing this, how are we going to change anything within ourselves that is going to consistently manifest in our physical, mental and spiritual experiences of life?

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Open first, then expect your life to look different.

SPARK

"Make room for a new you to take root and grow." Chills. Bulb chills.

11 LESSONS FROM SEEKING ANSWERS

1. A SOAKED MAP IS STILL A MAP
   Plans help you see a route. When the plan stops working, look around before you push the same door harder.
2. THE DOOR MIGHT BE IN THE PUDDLE
   An unexpected situation brings information your plan didn't have. Notice the new detail before you decide.
3. FORCE GETS MOVEMENT, NOT THE PICTURE
   When something sticks, change the angle before you add pressure. A close look can save hours of repairs.
4. JUDGE THE HARVEST, NOT JUST THE RESULT
   You got your way. Now ask: did the way you got it leave the situation, and the people in it, healthier?
5. MAKE IT AN EXPERIMENT, NOT A VERDICT
   If a moment feels like a test of your worth, there's no room to play. Make it small enough to learn from.
6. THE BOAT TIPPED. NOW YOU KNOW WHERE THE WATER GOT IN.
   A miss isn't a verdict on the person who folded the paper. Forgive it, laugh, and find the next fold.
7. YOU DON'T NEED THE WHOLE PATH
   Waiting for the full route to be clear? Take one step that tells you something you don't already know.
8. LEAVE A PAUSE
   Take one full breath before you answer a question you think you already understand. Then listen to the end.
9. OPEN THE WINDOW A CRACK
   Expecting the unexpected doesn't mean bracing for it. Stay curious, drop your shoulders, and let the breeze in.
10. PUT SOMETHING DOWN TO MAKE ROOM
    Thank the old habit for how it helped you. Then set it down so something new can take root.
11. WATER IT EVERY DAY
    Change grows from small, repeated care. A quieter reply today. Coming back to listen tomorrow.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Pick one lesson. Try it once this week.

SPARK

Then share the image with a friend who needs it. Good for the world!

GLOW BRIGHT, SHINE LIGHT

STORY

Adapted from the spoken piece "Where Should We Go When We Are Seeking Answers?" by Jason Allen Plouff

NARRATED BY

LOVE BULB

HOSTED BY

JASON, SAGE & SPARK

THIS EDITION

Success Sitcoms: Almost Animated with Jason, Vol 107. The six-chapter Seeking Answers comic hybrid, re-cut as an Almost Animated volume.

PUBLISHED BY

Bits of Brilliance Publishing

The scenes and dialogue are fictional adaptations of the questions and ideas in the recording. Love Bulb narrates. Jason is the human character.

SAGE & SPARK REACT

SAGE

Thanks for watching. Leave a pause for someone today.

SPARK

See you next volume. Glow bright, shine light!

YOUR TURN: SEEKING ANSWERS

1. What question are you carrying right now?

2. Where do you usually go looking for the answer?

3. What would change if you looked somewhere new this week?

4. One small change you will make in the next 7 days:

COMING NEXT

Vol 110: Full Charge Ahead

Vol 111: Frame by Frame

Vol 110 goes back to the oldest art in Jason's photo stream: Sage and Spark's first Light-Bulb Odyssey. Vol 111 opens the studio doors and shows how every Almost Animated comic gets made. Both free at jasonplouff.com/almostanimated.

FREE TO READ · ALMOST ANIMATED WITH JASON · VOL 107

Created by Jason Plouff

successsitcoms.com · jasonplouff.com/almostanimated

Hosted by Jason, Sage & Spark · Bits of Brilliance Publishing

AAWJ · VOL 107

ALMOST ANIMATED WITH JASON

VOL 107

SEEKING ANSWERS

THE WHOLE STORY IN 12 SCENES

Rain at the Old Cinema

A Door in the Puddle

The Reel Tears

A Seedling on the Screen

The Speech Becomes a Boat

A Very Small Shipwreck

The Branch Decides

Meeting Himself in the Glass

The Window Opens a Crack

A Second Cup

The Frame Worth Keeping

Room for a New Root

REAL DEAL

SUCCESS SITCOMS

Funny shows with real lessons. Laugh in the light, then go do the thing.

SUCCESSSITCOMS.COM

FROM THE LIGHTBULB UNIVERSE

LIGHTBULB GRATITUDE RUG

Stand on what you are grateful for. Make magic and glow on!

FREE TO READ · ALMOST ANIMATED WITH JASON · VOL 107

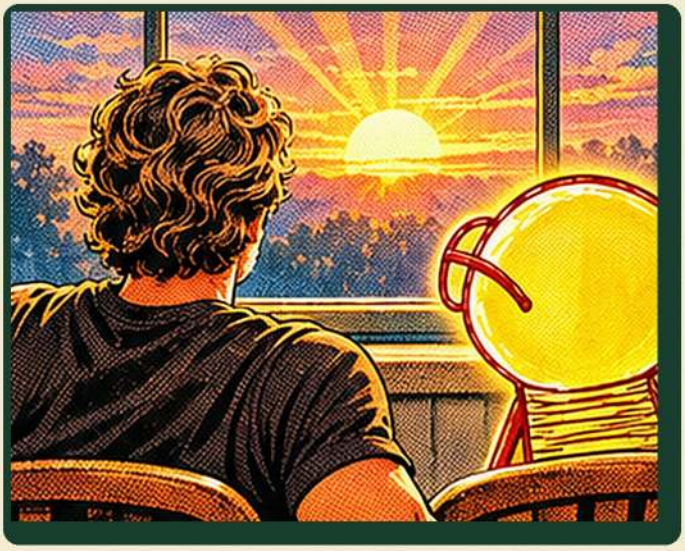

Created by Jason Plouff

successsitcoms.com · jasonplouff.com/almostanimated

Hosted by Jason, Sage & Spark · Bits of Brilliance Publishing

AAWJ · VOL 107

SEEKING ANSWERS

GLOW BRIGHT, SHINE LIGHT!

What if the search for an answer changes the person doing the asking? When rain upends Jason's plans, Love Bulb shows him a door he can only see in a puddle. From a jammed projector to a seed in a kitchen window: six small changes that make room for a different life.

REAL DEAL

COACHING WITH JASON

Stuck on a big decision? Leave a 90-minute call with a clear choice and a 30-day plan.

JASONPLOUFF.COM

REAL DEAL

BITS OF BRILLIANCE

Your knowledge. Your voice. Your book. We help you write it with AI.

BITSOFBRILLIANCE.COM

REAL DEAL

TITO'S HOPE

A medical-first dog and cat rescue in Surf City, El Salvador. Bring the vet to the animals.

TITOSHOPE.ORG

FREE TO READ · ALMOST ANIMATED WITH JASON · VOL 107

Created by Jason Plouff

successsitcoms.com · jasonplouff.com/almostanimated

Hosted by Jason, Sage & Spark · Bits of Brilliance Publishing

AAWJ · VOL 107